

Anne Marie Squeo

Chief Communications and Brand Officer

Anne Marie Squeo joined Xerox and was named chief communications and brand officer and an executive committee member effective March 25, 2019. In this role, Anne Marie oversees all aspects of global communications and marketing. She was appointed a senior vice president of Xerox Holdings Corporation on May 21, 2019.

Prior to Xerox, Anne Marie was IBM's vice president of Watson, Cloud and Technology Communications. She also has held senior communications roles at Netflix, Raytheon and Lockheed Martin.

Before transitioning to corporate communications, Anne Marie spent nearly 15 years as a journalist, including more than seven years at The Wall Street Journal. In this role, she won the Gerald R. Loeb Award in 2004 for Beat Reporting and was part of a small team that won the Pulitzer Prize for National Reporting in 2000. Anne Marie began her journalism career at Bloomberg News, where she led antitrust reporting during a period of heightened government activity including the high-profile case against Microsoft. She started her career in advertising.

She holds a master's degree in magazine journalism from New York University and received her bachelor's degree in communications from St. John's University.

-XXX-