

Tino Lancellotti

Chief Information Officer

Tino was named chief information officer effective February 2022. In this role, he leads global information technology initiatives to drive digital transformation and enterprise-wide modernization strategies that optimize business performance and operational efficiencies.

Most recently, he served as vice president of global infrastructure and production support at Xerox, where he was responsible for all aspects of infrastructure and applications. He previously served as vice president of large systems at Alight Solutions, where he was responsible for firmwide mainframe platforms across global locations and developed impactful cost reduction programs. He's also held senior IT positions at CreditSuisse, UBS, and Dun & Bradstreet.

Tino is a member of Verizon's Innovation Council and is actively involved with Feeding America charities.

He is also the executive sponsor of the Veterans Service Members Association, one of Xerox's ten Employee Resource Groups.

Tino earned a Master of Business Administration in Finance from Fairleigh Dickinson University and a Bachelor of Science in Marketing and Information Technology from Mercy College.
